(Modern) Revival of "Tell It To The Mayor"

WHYY is embarking on a new multi-platform citizen engagement project called It's Our City, that will premiere tomorrow at 8pm with a live 60-minute TV special with Mayor Michael Nutter and host Dave Davies, Senior Writer for the Philadelphia Daily News. You are invited to be in the live studio audience for the show and ask the Mayor questions about the city and its government and make suggestions for improvement. We're sure you have a few ideas to share.

The program will be simulcast on WHYY TV12, WHYY's main digital channel 12.1 (Comcast Channel 240, FiOS Channel 812), on WHYY 91FM, and the It's Our City website, www.whyy.org/city, which will also launch on June 20. Guests can begin arriving at WHYY studios at 6:30pm for a light reception. Seating will begin at 7:30 and all audience members must be in place by 7:45.

WHAT: Be a part of the premiere of It's Our City on WHYY

WHEN: Show airs tomorrow at 8:00PM (arrive by 7:30PM)

WHERE: WHYY Studios, 150 North 6th Street, Independence Mall West, 19106

WHY: You've got questions for the Mayor and nothing else to do until 11:00PM

HOW: To join the live broadcast RSVP to wdaughenbaugh@whyy.org

The End of "Justice Talking"

"Justice Talking," the Philadelphia-based NPR radio program, says farewell after nine years on the air. The show, focused on the intersection of American life, the U.S. Constitution, and the justice system, was unable to secure the necessary funding to continue this year.

While the program reached over 100 urban and rural public radio stations and drew experts from around the world, Philadelphians frequently recognized the voices of our local leaders grappling with issues that affect our city. We at Young Involved Philadelphia will miss the voice of Margot Adler and will be tuning in for the final two programs on June 23rd and 30th that will recap some Justice Talking highlights of the past nine years.
